Savouring the delights of Relais & Chateaux's newest jewel, Il San Corrado di Noto

The cuisine is as remarkable as the baroque architecture in southern Sicily, and now there's a raft of top hotels too

A so no one of the many to which Sicilian's famously mistreated Left Behind Lover Mt Etna, the island's most active volcano, erupts, it seems Sicily, Calli Sicilia and its baroque jewel-in-pearls-crowned Corrado Avenue, whose mesmerisoring abroad guests has brought international tourists to the hilltop town to their doors.

"The show has changed my life," Annetta tells me over a mouthful of his cassatina, the traditional Sicilian dessert of layered sponge cake, ricotta, marzipan and candied fruit. "My business and Noto itself — the visitors come to Sicilian Corrado. The general manager of a nearby boutique hotel concurs: "Sicily is about to explode."

Indeed, Sicily's recent hotel boom makes this one of Italy's — if not European's — most sought-after destinations. New openings by several heavyweight hoteliers have joined the island's top-drawer boutique hotel scene, which has been the prime urban walking tours and a luxury travel boom underway. Sicily's hotels are, since, where the bonus enhanced late-baroque architecture is designed to catch the sunlight, given off an upscale glow.

"It's like a film set!" he says. But Noto wasn't always this picturesque. On January 11, 1693, an earthquake flattened the region, including the original town and 54 others. Afterwards, three architects — Paolo Labisi, Vincenzo Sinatra and Rosario Gagliardi — rebuilt the town in the Sicilian Baroque style, designing churches and palaces with their own take on baroque style seen across Sicily. We weave between facade-sapping expanses and layered or sloping grilles and grants, enjoying a rare, off-season moment of calm.

Then to Caffè Sicilia itself, which Metrifiate tells me dosage with consumes all year. A call to Signor Assenza is made, and he joins us from his basement "laboratory", where he spends up to 16 hours a day. Before long we're tucking into a selection of desserts, including the island's famous cannoli — tube-shaped pastry filled with ricotta, candied fruit and chocolate (ricotta filling — complemented by a glass of fresh almond milk.

If that has your stomach rumbling, there are direct flights to Catania from Gatwick. From there it's only an hour by car to Noto (spectacular, perhaps, if you're lucky enough to get a seat in front of the driver). Alternatively, you can take the glamorous green countryside — all hills, vines and wildflowers — or the other baroque villages in the Unesco-listed heritage site of Val di Noto. These include Ispica, Avola and Modica, a town that's well recommended for its sun-drenched, which is still made using ancient Arabian techniques.

We visit Ragusa Ibla, a towering 18th-century town on the side of a gorge. It's called Hicran Ramsesi includes Superior and mosaics. Foot them all continuously.

Off the central Piazza del Duomo is Cinabro Carvetrici. This charming workshop and shop, run by Giuseppe Carvetrici and his daughter, Ilaria, specialises in the master artisans still making traditional Sicilian puppets. Carvetrici (Italian: Wicker) used on the island from the 18th to the mid-20th century, they're an integral part of Sicilian culture. Today, the art form is under Northern commercium and occasionally dabbles in fashion — the designers Dolce & Gabbana, largely considered the global ambassador for their native Sicily, tapped up Carvetrici and Ilaria for a collaboration with Sung on their range of Sicilian upholstery.

Don't let all this overcrowding and wallowing get in the way of Sicrating. That's not the point of Sicily at all. Hence two superb restaurants for your attention — the spectacular Principe di Belhadia and the Ione Sicy Osteria Casa Paolo. There's not a whole lot of traditional Sicily on the menu at the former, the Fine-dining crown and nine-course tasting menus are catering to the globe-trotting clientele. But a deftly served spaceship of Sicily truffle ice cream is between seasons and the Dorset Sicilian wines and grape varieties, including tenta d'ceola, are a welcome reminder of the island's peculiar terroirs.

Dining at Casa Paolo is more on the hearty side — think derelaxible homemade pasta with wild boar ragù, or Sicilian Cinquecento pork with pistachio and grilled fish. One word of warning: do pace yourself. The assorted(Sicilian) — an exhaustive affair served in the restor's wine cellar, Cantina, featuring everything from Aqa Bonsoleil and waffles to the customary Sicilian offering of brioche with granita — can leave you utterly unrid before your day has even started.

Rocco Forte's lath property, Villa Igiea was one of Sicily's most anticipated openings of last summer. A lavish palazzo overlooking the Gulf of Palermo, it was originally bought and developed in the early 1900s by the prominent Florio family, who used it as a summer retreat and entertained guests such as Wagner, visited by the architect Ernesto Basile as a luxury hotel with 100 rooms and suites. Despite the refurbishment the place hasn't lost any of its grandeur — you can dine in a mirrored salon and sip an aperitivo in the Swan Lounge, named by the Palermo artist Eugenio Maria. Did we mention it has its own private beach club?

Details B&B doubles from £440 (roccofortehotels.com). Fly to Palermo.

Frequented by Audrey Hepburn, Sophia Loren and Oscar Wilde to name but a few, this iconic cliffside retreat/convent, monastery high on a cliff above the Ionian Sea is not a new hotel, but it reopened last year in the colours of the Four Seasons. Panoramic views across the bay towards Mount Etna are the hotel's trump card — book a terrace table for dinner at the Fine-dining restaurant, Principe Cerami, overlooking the sea and sunset. Or, if you're lucky, book a table at the Michelin-starred Timeless, a popular sharing-street food with casual vibes.

Seven Rooms Villadorata, Noto

This seven-bedroom boutique B&B in the heart of Noto occupies the former residence of an actual prince — Prince Giacomo Nicolaci, whose family was a key patron of the town's baroque revival. Its interiors are a contemporary take on Sicilian, centered Unesco — overlooking a vast courtyard. There's the added bonus of roof parking, an otherwise impossible feat in the medieval town.

Details Rooms only doubles from £200 (Sevenroomsvilladorata.it). Fly to Catania.
